

FRAMING IDEAS FOR Impactful Partnership

- Diverse impacts
- Small things with big effects
- Mind-expanding
- Intimate outsiders
- Evolving art

Working with parents

You could use this version when working with families as a way to frame a discussion about the relevant aspect of partnership. You could invite them to work with you to add on information that is relevant to them. These sheets can be used to map progress so far and plan where to go next, and can be used to keep the partnership focused on its purpose, keeping an end in sight.

Working with what matters: helper-parent

Helpers and parents care about different things, even when they are working together on a shared problem. Recognising these differences and making them explicit can produce a valuable resource that enables impactful partnership to unfold in a way that is acceptable to parents and secures their commitment to taking on challenges and persisting with unfamiliar strategies. Helper expertise is needed to solicit what matters to parents, to make what matters to them as helpers explicit, and to align their responses accordingly.

