Working with parents

You could use this version when working with families as a way to frame a discussion about the relevant aspect of partnership. You could invite them to work with you to add on information that is relevant to them. These sheets can be used to map progress so far and plan where to go next, and can be used to keep the partnership focused on its purpose, keeping an end in sight.

Working at the frontier

Working at the frontier means not being tied to what is known, familiar, routine, or pre-specified. It is one way in which impactful partnership is an evolving art, and it contributes to mind-expanding qualities of partnership as a joint learning process. Frontier work has to be done consciously and with families' best interests in mind.
